Love— Dad, Mom, Sam and Pete

*Halfbacks dance and halfbacks flirt, while linemen crawl and eat dirt.
When game time comes, backs run the ball.
When glory comes, they get it all.
But if 100 yards they gain, it's through the linemen's sweat and pain.
While halfbacks cry when they see blood, linemen hide it under mud.
Some backs have moves and others speed, but spirit's all a lineman needs.
Backs are good and some are fine, but they'd be nothing without the line.
The fans all see halfbacks run, but few see what the line has done*

*And that's why those who know agree, There's half a game the fans don't see.
(found online author unknown)*

Love, Rachel XO

We emerge with bloodied hands, and bones so sore that it takes a few hours the next morning before we can walk upright.

We measure our worth by the HOLES we open for players with smaller numbers: their brief nod is our only applause.

In our little world we stand.

Our boundaries are the sleds and the chutes.

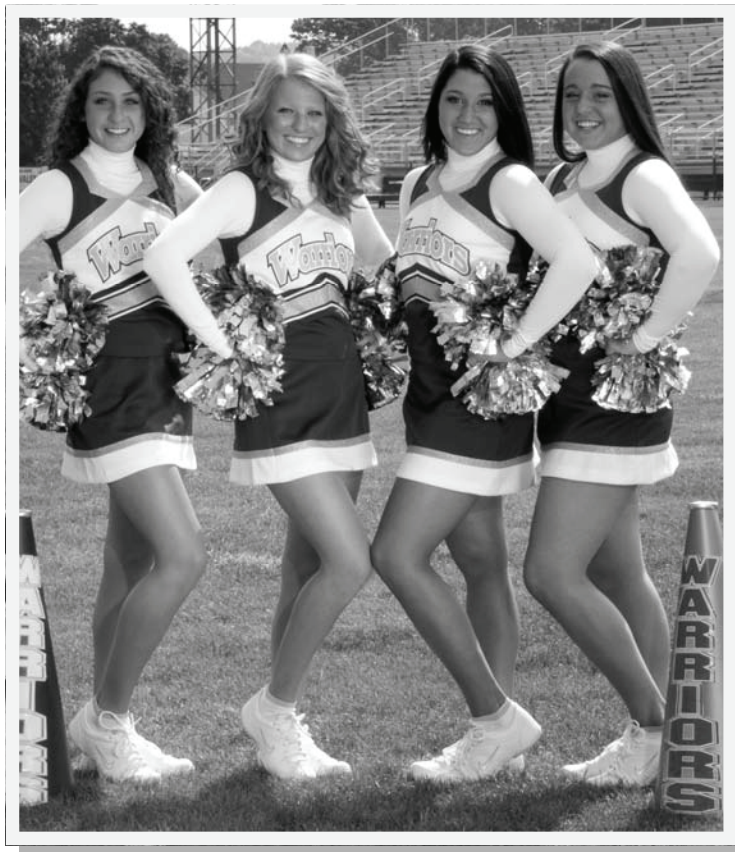

Our teachers are men who dwell in the dual worlds of detail and violence, who teach by a voice that can either wake the dead or gently ease two hours of pain.

This is our world. It starts with us.

WE ARE THE LINE.
